

In its day the Cross Timbers was as much a deterrent to through transportation as the Rocky Mountains. There was no trails through the ancient scrub oak forests that Irving described as "Forests of Cast Iron." The scrub oak trees grow very close together, resulting in the lower limbs dying and forming an umbrella-like canopy that reaches to the ground; making it impossible to walk or ride a horse through.